COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

President Davis, of the Board of Education, advises the enforcement of the compulsory education law, a law which has been practically a dead letter since it took effect, on March 28, 1874. He has found that the proportion of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years who do not attend any school, public or private, is much greater than it should be, after making a proper allowance for invalids and other incapables.

For instance, in 1888, out of a total of 6193 census children, 2106, or 34 per cent, did not attend any school at all, and only 3831, or 61 per cent, attended the public schools. In 1891, in a census of 5355, only 3661, attended the public schools, and 1189 attended no schools whatever.

The apparent falling off in the number of census children during the past five years, which necessarily implies a falling off in the population, has led Mr. Davis and many others to conclude that the school census has not been properly taken. He therefore urges the Board to rigidly supervise the taking of the census in the future.

There is, however, nothing abnormal nor unusual in the condition of affairs as reported by Mr. Davis. In many communities in the United States and elsewhere it has been observed that not more than 50 or 60 per cent, of the total number of census children attend schools of any kind. There is not that percentage of invalids and incapables among census school children, but a greater part of that percentage is probably made up of children who are obliged to work in factories and elsewhere in order to assist in the support of the family, and of children kept at home to mind the babies while their brothers and sisters and parents are at work.

The percentage of literacy, however, in any community is not a reliable index either of its prosperity or morality. Trustworthy statistics show that in certain European communities noted for the small percentage of crime the percentage of literacy was much lower than it was in communities in which the percentage of crime was large. The same coincidence has been remarked in the United States. Some of the most daring and clever burglars have been able to repeat the multiplication table backwards, while the most expert forgers on record have been known to write a hand like copperplate.

Education and morality are not synonymous. Compulsory morality is needed more than compulsory education.—Sacramento Bee.

Something over a year ago a crank dropped a dynamite bomb in the office of Russell Sage. Sage immediately got behind one of his clerks using him as a shield. The bomb exploded and while Sage was unhurt, the clerk was nearly killed, and lay at death's door in the hospital a number of weeks. Sage refused to pay even his hospital expenses, so when the young man became well he sued Sage for damages. The public will be pleased to learn that the court awarded him a judgment for $25,000. We sincerely hope the old miser will have to pangle.

Wall Street bankers who bought the bonds of the Cherokee Nation have deposited in the Sub-Treasury in New York City $6,740,000 in paper currency in payment of the same. The notes are in denominations from $10 to $1,000 and make a pile thirty cubic feet in dimension. The money is to remain in the Sub-Treasury until the Cherokee Chiefs call for it.

A practical joker at Leadville, Colo., filled a pipe with sawdust, attached a lighted fuse to it and left it in the court-house. It was discovered and the fuse broken off before it reached the bomb. The authorities immediately offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest of the person who placed the machine in the court-house. Subsequently it was discovered that the bomb contained nothing but sawdust and the reward was reduced to $200. If caught the joker will be prosecuted for misdemeanor.

A machine for cancelling stamps by steam has been patented. But the great public has to still lick its own stamps! All the valuable assistance seems to be given to the officials who are paid for their labor.
